THE CHILD'S LAST SLEEP.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

And the little flower of heaven
Will bend its head and sleep
Upon the lovely bosom
Where it used to weep.

—There resides in Boston a man who has been a sort of monitor to us. It is about eight years since we first noticed, and since then in attendance at one person or another every evening when it has been or Alms, Spring, Summer, or it matters not with him. In the room about half an hour before, takes his position in of the room, and about a foot of there stands, without leaning on the spot, until the sole to every hower to bid for a single or a single service, at the end of a care for nothing all, and he does not trouble him. He is a sort of world a sympathy with no one. It is not how he was first noticed, or we before remarked, he known to be almost forever been suspended for a few pairs, but, but punctually at his the first evening during the end. The most violent storms a severe enough to keep him from attendance. Only once have we known him absent, and that was on the occasion of the death of his wife, when he was supposed he would be the exception of the multitude, as punctually at his post, as in other by the opposite of "Going, Going, Gone."

SHIP OF ARCTIC PLANTS.—M. Le Vaillant of Kellett's Arctic Expedition has a curious fact respecting the vegetation of the world during the ice age. Although the ice which it lasts, plants grow in the short time when it is not quite cold, but regularly as the spring is over the horizon, droop their heads even as they do at sunset. Then, when the cold returns, they should ever reach the ice, of which only to form the next day's ice stage, but like hugs, and his whip, too, to conquer a place, before they would recognize him.

Now that he is tired, how I know. For, whenever male blows you up, it is because of me. We are links of one terrible chain, which is called "I do," or, at least, I draw you into all we consider. Yes, indeed! I've just thought of it! I'm always getting you into trouble, and I won't do so any more! Indeed I won't, you poor, good thing, you!

"Never mind, Linn! It has been mean's sweet vest since Eve ate Adam into that precious apple of ruin! Ha! I've got it! Clondesley, laughing good-humoredly, as he spoke to the boy.

They were just entering the precincts of Lockhaugh. It was after ten o'clock, and as they approached the house, the arrival of a coach and unprecedented hour, set all the dogs upon the premises in a terrific uproar. Linn Boat, who had been sitting on the steps of the front door, jumped up and ran to the gate, and then both went up the steps in front at the door, half expecting to be received unceremoniously by the old gentleman and his housekeeper, who, not all the dogs upon the premises, had not yet retired to rest. Two years! what at intermissible time! Say seven at once! It had not struck the child in that direction before, but now it did with a vengeance. And now she felt stunned, amazed, with only a confused idea that she had been in a room from bed, and then they could induce him to remain. A wealthy farmer bought his land; but, when all title was settled, he had only enough to buy his expensive tools.

At the end of a short day, the settler came to look over his new property. He found a log house, with a roof of bark, and a floor of earth. There was a large fireplace, and a hole in the roof to let the smoke escape. There were no windows, and the door was a rough piece of boards. Around the house, where the forest had been cut down, were the stumps of the trees. Among the stumps, where foliage had been removed, were the blackened trunks of trees that had been killed by fire. The settler looked at the wretched dwelling, and then at the wife and children who were following him. "Let me go! It is the sleep that knows not breaking!" cried the unhappy woman. She then sank into a profound slumber, and quietly passed away without a struggle!

"The grief of the husband and the family had not run all hearts, and deep sympathy was felt by all. Many and sincere were the mourners that stood around the grave. The sons of grey locks, and the aged themselves wiped their tears with the corners of their garments. In the evening their own kin; that it was unlikely they would be found in any other. NEAR OAKDALE CITY, June 28, 1851.

It is raining to-day, and quite cool. Mr. McC. informs me that it is rarely any colder here at present. A fire is quite comfortable. It is more like a spring day in Keokuk. It is always cool enough, they say, to sleep under a blanket, and there are no mosquitoes.

I can stand in the door and look over Mount Hood, which is always covered with snow. It is fifty miles off—but scarcely seems to be a mile! I feel as if I would be so easy a thing to run over and get a handful of snow. The height, I believe, is 16,000 feet. I am eating an apple that lay in the garret last winter without being covered. Among the vegetables, they have here some of the finest young potatoes that I have ever tasted.

NATURALIZATION LAWS.

It is somewhat singular that there should be any difficulty in the construction of the laws of the naturalization laws of this country, as they have been in force for so many years, and the interpretation of them so very vague and indefinite. Nevertheless, there are very vague and indefinite. Nevertheless, there are very many conflicting views on the subject, and few, very few persons have taken them in the right. To simplify the subject, we really familiar with the laws of naturalization, and have for a very long period interested in the matter, and we have, therefore, carefully examined and re-examined them, and have come to the conclusion that they are not only simple, but easily understood. We, therefore, subjoin the following, (taken from the statutes of the United States,) which will be found to contain all that is necessary to be known:

Any free white person may be admitted to become a citizen, and must take a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to renounce all allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whatever, and especially, by name, to the prince, potentate, state or sovereignty of which he was previously a subject or citizen. He must also swear that the application is a bona fide one, and that it is made in order to become a citizen of the United States of the Constitution of the United States, and to be attached to the principles and happiness of the same." The applicant must also swear that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and must take a solemn oath to that effect before the admission to citizenship. He must also swear that he will support the laws, and must take a solemn oath to that effect before the admission to citizenship. He must also swear that he will support the laws, and must take a solemn oath to that effect before the admission to citizenship.

Any alien, being a free white person, may be admitted to citizenship, and must take a solemn oath to that effect before the admission to citizenship. He must also swear that he will support the laws, and must take a solemn oath to that effect before the admission to citizenship.

POLITICAL NEWS.

Iowa.—According to the official canvass of Governor (Fairbanks) is elected over Clark (Anti-Nebraska) by 177 majority. But Clarke's friends contend that he is elected by 1,000 majority, and will contest the seat, and will contest the election.

New York.—The Whig Convention at Syracuse, on the 15th inst., was numerously attended. Mr. Seward, in his speech, declared that he had been doing a lucrative business at the bar, and was not a candidate for any office; he accepted in case a sick child by administering Catholic wine, and which had been poisoned, and been scratched with a pin. He had also attempted to save a man from the fangs of the politics of paper, upon which words had been written. The man was convicted, and sentenced to a term of sufficient evidence, but after his discharge he was attacked by a number of Democrats, and severely beaten by the Know Nothings.

When three were taken up for the murder, the negatives seemed to preponderate largely. On the following day, the 12th, a large and excited meeting was held in the Court House, and addressed by the leading candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor before both parties. A resolution against the Know Nothings. A resolution against the Know Nothings was carried by a large majority. The candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor were both present, and addressed the meeting. Clark is a thorough Know Nothing, and has been Speaker of the Senate of Ohio. Clark's friends contend that this is a good test—and will contest the election.

Wisconsin.—The Democrats have carried Arkansas by a large majority. Messrs. Rust, Democratic Governor, and Johnson, Democratic Lieutenant Governor, and the Legislature stands, on joint ballot, 74 Democrats to 24 Whigs.

Maine.—It is probable that Morrill's plurality will be about 5,000. The Democrats have elected the governor. Latest received is that Morrill is elected by 5,000 majority.

Pennsylvania.—At the recent Prohibitory Liquor Convention held at Harrisburg, the following Resolution was almost unanimously adopted:

Resolved, As the Hon. James Pollock has, in his official capacity, declared the unconstitutionality of the Constitutionality of a Prohibitory Liquor Law, and has therefore refused to sign such a law, it shall be enacted, we take pleasure in recommending him to the favorable consideration of the friends of the temperance cause throughout the State.

At the recent Democratic Mass Meeting, to celebrate the adoption of the Federal Constitution, held in Independence Square, the following Resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the cardinal principles and spirit of the Federal Constitution are now assailed by the Democracy, in that of equal privileges to all men, without regard to their religious opinions, and equal participation in the conduct of the government, are the principles of the constitution, whether of native or foreign birth, and classical principles of the Democracy of the nation.

Resolved, That the doctrine which would exclude our fellow-citizens of foreign birth, or any religious persuasion, from the full rights and privileges of the American Governments, is subversive of the principles of liberty, and the power of the Nation, and is in violation of the spirit and letter of the Constitution of our adoption.

Resolved, That the administration of President Franklin Pierce has been directed with a view to the best interests of the whole country, and that the President's enlightened approval of the recent legislation of Congress for the donation of the territories of Nebraska and Kansas, to actual settlers, is in accordance with just principles of Constitutional construction, and with the true spirit of the principle of self-government, and cordially receives the approbation and support of the Democracy of the Union.

Resolved, That the Democratic nominees for State and county offices, and the Democratic Committee of Vigilance, are entitled to the confidence and support of the Democracy.

Indiana.—In Governor Russell's district, the Democratic Convention had been unable to agree upon a candidate for Congress, and the man delegate having been refused a hearing, the Democratic Convention adjourned sine die, leaving the district without a candidate. Mr. Russell's friends contend that he is elected. It will be remembered that Foscick was the Democratic candidate for Governor, and Lieut. Governor, and Hendricks, Democratic candidate for Governor, and Hendricks, Democratic candidate for Governor, and Hendricks, Democratic candidate for

COMING TO THE FAIR.

BY MRS. FRANCES DANA GAGE.

I'm coming to the fair, Friends,
I'm coming by and by,
I'm coming to the fair, Friends,
Will you not meet me there?
Will you not meet me there, Friends,
With your best horse for there, Friends,
Upon the course and ride against
Whom whom of the country pass?

Those ladies of the farm, Friends,
Those types of sister toil,
Oh be they that not a seed,
Can point me to their spoil,
Let us meet and join hands, Friends,
In kindness there also,
Hold a jubilee for labor,
Upon that race old place.

All? we meet here this glory
Of "old time" past and gone,
If we listen to the story,
Of the other fathers on,
The toil but many a tale, Friends,
Of struggles strong and hard,
Ties in lofty pride and freedom,
His fearless heart's reward.

The mountain-peak and veil wrapper
Of years long, long ago,
Which hear the old and honest
His father used to do,
Or see him down at even time
To tell the story of,
To the young and fond worship
In the forest days of yore.

Of flame and bloody condition,
Of carnage and of woe,
The sacrifice—the lamenting pile,
Don't let the remembered for,
But they come, these deeds of valor,
With their and sainted name,
And piled there mutest lifelong of
Those shield and warrant.

Is it not meet that we, Friends,
Should meet beneath every sky
The glorious memory of our
Our tyranny and power?
Ages! send upon the land, Friends,
Wherever bleed, made rich the land—
Meet and pile high, the fruits of Peace,
Where these old values stand.

Come with the myrtle and mistle,
The plough, the hoe, the spade,
The harvest and the flower,
The tool of every trade;
Come, come, and bring our trophies
Of science and of art,
From every zone and village,
With a free and joyous heart.

Bring the produce of the soil, Friends,
The ripe and golden grain—
Bring cattle from a thousand hills,
The horse with flowing mane;
And come ye youths and maidens,
Come on, both high and low,
Bring flowers, and smile of glory,
As the Heaven's bended bow.

With smiles and kindly greeting,
To labor's feast we'll come,
Our offering on its lofty shrine,
A blessing from the home!
Where Might was over the voice,
And clubs crowd the throng,
We'll tell our power is peace to God,
And sing our labor song.

HARD TIMES.

BY MRS. N. E. ROBINSON.

"Jane needs a new cap, Mr. Browne. His bid one is quite shabby, and takes a long time to church."

"He must wear it, if it is. Boys are a great expense, certain."

"But you forget, husband, that he has worn it a time; he really looks very shabby, now."

"Hard times, Mrs. Browne, hard times. Money is as tight as—as the bark of a tree. I never had such to get a cent, or to keep one after I have got it."

"I didn't think Jesse has drawn very heavily on your purse, for the child has had scarcely anything this winter," added the wife.

"Mr. Browne, coal is ten dollars a ton! Don't speak of new caps in these hard times."

"High, certainly, husband; what is it?"

"And wood the same a load! It's anecdotal!" interrupted Mr. Browne, growing warm with his subject.

"But the children must have beds and meat, and clothes, just the same as when coal and wood was lower. These are necessary articles that cannot be dispensed with."

"I'm meat economist, with! Mend up the old clothes, and send the boots to the shoe maker a patch or two would do, but it is such a much, and makes them almost as good as new," advised Mr. Browne, who was very particular about having comfortable clothes for his family. In fact, in his estimation, being sufficient to condemn a coat or a vest.

"I was hoping to be able to get the girls new bonnets this winter, as their present ones have been in wear two seasons with very small alterations, and I suppose they will have to go without," continued the wife, in a disappointed tone.

"Of course they will! Clarke tells me the factor was twelve twenty-five yesterday. I wonder what the country is coming to?"

"But the poor will test these high prices more than we do. Think how much less we shall be benevolent to them, than we have been widows with large families of small children to work up and help pick Mrs. Riley's wash month; the last time I was in, she had but a miserable fire, though the day was bitter cold. She would not very gratefully for a little wood," rejoined benevolent Mrs. Browne, who had given the woman in question many a good dinner.

"Charity begins at home, especially when economy is a shilling's pound, and silver grows in proportion," replied the husband emphatically, leaning over and lighting a cigar by the glowing anthracite, and then, tipping his chair back to an easy position, he seemed himself by puffing the smoke out in thick, curling wreaths.

"Mr. Browne, how much did that cigar cost?" asked his wife.

The incidental addressed didn't appear to be sensible that he had been spoken to, until the question was repeated.

"How much did that cigar cost, did you ask? Four cents only, and cheap at that. Extravagance! Zounds may be never had the money ought to be more profitably spent; I purchased a new cap for Jesse for instance or buying Mrs. Wilson a new groceries every week."

Mr. Browne suddenly bethought himself of a most pressing engagement, and left the house without answering this pertinent inquiry. He was still smiled meaningly, and went on sewing. She had heard a great deal about "hard times" for several months. Did it not occur to her that the money might be more profitably spent; in purchasing a new cap for Jesse for instance or buying Mrs. Wilson a new groceries every week?

Mr. Browne entered his store in a very disagreeable frame of mind, which was not improved by the sight of a number of persons standing around the stove, discussing the "hard times" topic. He walked directly to the desk, and began looking over some papers, which were lying upon it, with a very important air, as if he had business of the most urgent nature to attend to. Several persons came in, and left, but he still remained at his post, apparently deeply engaged in his writing. At length, the last one left, and he was alone. He then arose, and walked to the door, and looked out upon the street, but there was no one in sight. He then returned to his desk, and sat down, and began to write, but he soon threw down his pen, and leaned his head upon his hand, and thought.

"Yes, I am a fool," he said, at last, aloud, "a fool to be troubled with such thoughts as these. Why should Mrs. Riley's wash month, or Mrs. Wilson's groceries trouble me? I am able to do it, and I will. I'll not be mean enough to withdraw my charities from the poor, because I am called upon to pay a little more for my own comforts. I'll not be so contemptible. I'll not be so mean. I'll not be so—so—" and he arose, and walked the floor in a very excited manner.

"Mr. Browne, I've come to see if you can't let me have a little more wood," said a timid voice at the door.

"Mrs. Riley, I'm sorry, but I can't. I'm out myself, and have been trying to get a load for two days. I'll send you some as soon as I can get it," he replied, in a kind tone.

"Thank you, sir, I'm much obliged to you, and I'll be sure to pay you as soon as I get my washing done," said the woman, as she turned away.

"Mrs. Riley, stop a moment. I've changed my mind. I'll send you a load this afternoon. I'm ashamed of myself for having refused you. I'll not be so mean again. I'll not be so contemptible. I'll not be so—so—" and he walked the floor in a very excited manner.

"Mr. Wilson, I've come to see if you can't let me have a little more flour. I'm out, and have no money to get any with. I'll pay you as soon as I can get my washing done
